Bees in belfry create a buzz

THERE WAS more than a peal of bells coming from the tower of a village church after a colony of bees took up residence.

As St Laurence, Alvechurch, bellringer Geoff Franklin told The Village: "There was no immediate danger, but with remedial work being planned on the stonework, the masons didn't need to have to work around the bees."

So they called in Greg Hunt, who keeps an apiary at Fruitfields orchard in Barnt Green. He lowered a trap hive down the outside of the tower (main picture), then returned a week later to find bees had moved in and were already collecting honey (right).

Blue is still the colour

NOW THE General Election dust has settled, the people of this area continue to be represented at Westminster by a Conservative MP.

Amid vast swings away from the Tories as Labour swept to power nationally, the Bromsgrove seat vacated by Sajid Javid was won by Bradley Thomas, former Conservative leader of neighbouring Wychavon Council.

Unlike recent General Elections for Bromsgrove, the result was not a foregone conclusion, but Mr Thomas still emerged more than 3,000 votes clear of the Labour candidate, Neena Gill, by 16,533 to her 13,517.

There were many other issues clouding the likely result in Bromsgrove besides the national anti-Tory sentiment, most notably the entry of a Reform UK candidate into the fray, with Glen Brampton taking 9,584 votes.

Meanwhile, the Liberal Democrat candidate, David Nicholl, increased his party's share and took a sizeable chunk of the total vote, with 7,391.

Villagers will, however, never know the outcome had the regional Labour Party chosen Bromsgrove District Council's chairwoman, Sam Ammar, who had also been the chair of the Labour Party in Bromsgrove, to run as their candidate.

Complaining that Labour had "parachuted in an unknown candidate from Ealing" Coun Ammar resigned from Labour to run as an independent. She attracted 1,561 votes, while highlighting the fact Labour's candidate was from London.

ONE IMMEDIATE concern for the new MP to address will be the threat to the Green Belt that has protected our surrounding countryside for half a century.

The new Labour Government is likely to reintroduce mandatory home-building targets and dent Green Belt protection, with sites for "new towns" set to be announced by the end of the year.

The Green candidate, Talia Elli, received 1,675 votes and Aheesha Zahir, of the Workers Party, 144.

After the result, Mr Thomas, who was born and raised in Worcestershire, told The Village: "I'm honoured and humbled to have been elected as the MP for Bromsgrove in the county that has always been my home.

"Having met so many local people, organisations and businesses over the last few months has ensured that as your newly elected MP, I have a clear understanding of local priorities and I look forward to commencing my work.

"This includes being Bromsgrove's ambassador in Westminster, holding the government to account and pushing for investment to ensure that our area remains a great place to live, work and visit," he added.

"I will also use my voice as your MP to champion topics and issues that affect all of us and to play my role in scrutinising legislation to ensure that it is in both our local and national interest."

Initiative aims to kick-start village centre

A NEW PARTNERSHIP is being formed to help to invigorate business in a village centre facing a number of challenges.

The Alvechurch Business Partnership, backed by Bromsgrove District Council, has formed a steering group and is preparing to consult with village businesses and other interests.

Its main aim is to "improve and raise the profile of Alvechurch by making it an attractive, accessible safer and better place to live, visit, shop and do business".

Among the priorities are to:

- Create a village that is accessible and an attractive place to live;
- Create a safe and secure environment for all users;
- Enhance the profile of Alvechurch and promote individual businesses through a concentrated PR and Marketing campaign;
- Support businesses through representing their interests and lobbying on issues that matter to trade so they can operate to their full potential;
- Encourage and assist startup businesses within Alvechurch.

One area of particular urgency is parking. The largest car park in the village centre at the Alvechurch Inn is set to be reduced to a 30-minute limit from November, regardless of whether the application to create a 28-bed hotel on that site is approved.

A member of the steering group told The Village: "Alvechurch is a fantastic rural hub in which to live, but it needs local businesses to thrive. It has lost its post office and bakery and now both of its butchers are gone and the shops are sitting empty.

A MOVING commemoration of the 80th anniversary of D-Day at Alvechurch Cricket Club culminated in the lighting of a beacon.

The torch basket was made for the event by Gordon Brady, aged 77, and Bob Dunn, aged 80, with help from Gordon's son Adam.

With military backgrounds, Gordon (above, left) and Adam (right) joined organiser Brett Shepherd in front of the beacon for the picture after the beacon was lit by Gordon.

"Ensuring these remain as business premises, bringing services and life to the village centre, would be the sorts of successes the new partnership would like to help to achieve."

A business survey has been prepared by the steering group and is due to be circulated by the end of August.

Anyone wanting to provide details to receive the survey or seeking further information can contact Coun Alan or Rachael Bailes on: a.bailes@bromsgrove.gov.uk

Parking pass plea

STREET-PARKING by commuters avoiding charges at Barnt Green station is clogging roads around the village centre, Barnt Green Parish Council.

A resident asked if it would be possible to introduce a two-hour waiting limit, with parking permits issued to residents.

Parish chairman Robert Cholmondeley said that while permits seemed a good idea, they would backfire on residents because there would then be nowhere for visitors to park.

Lifts update

A DROP-IN session has been organised for villagers to hear progress on the installation of long-awaited lifts between platforms at Barnt Green railway station.

Network Rail representatives are fulfilling a pledge made at a public meeting earlier in the year. The drop-in session runs from 7-9pm at Friends Meeting House, Sandhills Road, on Monday August 5.

Inn decision

A DECISION on plans for a 28-bed budget hotel in the Alvechurch Conservation Area was due to be made as The Village went to press.

More than 130 objections had been made to the planning authority over the application to extend The Alvechurch Inn, a pub on the site of the former sports & social club.

The site had for a number of years been listed as an Asset of Community Value, which would have meant any sale of the building would have had to be offered to the community first. But this status lapsed and the site was sold to the current owner before an application was made to have it relisted.

Alvechurch Parish Council objected to the hotel plans and was among those expected to speak against them at the Bromsgrove planning committee meeting on July 9.

AN ARMY officer from Barnt Green has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal in the King's Birthday Honours, marking almost 25 years' distinguished service

Warrant Officer Danny Bromage (pictured above meeting King Charles), of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, said he was shocked to receive the call, adding: "I never imagined receiving such an honour."

CLAYTON'S LAST CHOP

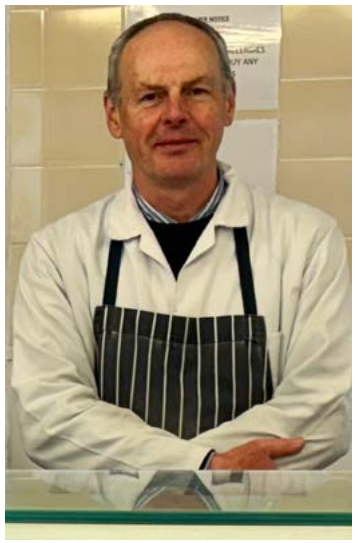
VILLAGE butcher Clayton Fern, had been serving meat to Alvechurch for 50 years, when he made the decision to retire in June.

After a long service to Alvechurch and the surrounding areas, 66-year-old Clayton, who started in the butchers industry when he was just 16, said: "It was a difficult decision to make. But if I'd left it any longer, I'd start to get Christmas orders. At least this way it gives people some time to make other plans for Christmas."

When asked what he was going to do now, he replied with a chuckle: "Nothing!" Although clarified he has his motorbikes to keep him occupied and has also planned a big fishing trip to Mongolia (though the suggestion of a potential new business as a fishmonger was swiftly ruled out).

Villagers will miss Clayton, not just for his cuts of meat and produce but for his willingness to go above and beyond for the community.

During the Covid-19 pandemic, Clayton began to make home deliveries around the area to ensure those too vulnerable to come to the shop or unable to leave the house were still supplied with fresh meat. After 50 years, it's a well deserved break for Clayton, who has served generations in Alvechurch: "I've served people, and then I've served their children and then the grandchildren come in as well... that makes me feel a bit old!"



A familiar sight: Clayton mans the counter in the shop's final week.

With it's traditional dark blue exterior tiles, Clayton Fern's butchers was a staple for many, and a much-loved and appreciated shop on Red Lion Street.

It was also the last butcher in Alvechurch, (following the closure of Jacob's butchers, previously E.J Crows & Son in The Square, in 2023).

Seen to be a huge loss for Alvechurch, villagers will now need to travel further to another local butchers, or head to the supermarkets for their weekly meat shop.

Clayton had a final message to villagers and all of his customers: "Thank you for supporting me over the last 50 years."

SEVEN-YEAR-OLD Rafe Lewis is celebrating winning four tickets to Blackwell Music Festival in September.

The Blackwell schoolboy exclaimed "wow!" when he was announced as the lucky winner of a draw at the village's summer festival in June. Entrants had completed a loyalty card by enjoying six fairground games. "It was very surprising out of all the people that were there and, well, I liked it!" he said. "It was a good surprise."

Rafe, who promised to take his mum, dad and brother, is a veteran who's enjoyed previous village music festivals. "I hope that firstly everyone has a really good time, and there will be inflatables and hopefully I can stay up late!" he added.

Rafe and his family will likely be joined by a sell-out crowd on Saturday September 7th with tickets selling fast. The day promises seven bands, plenty for kids to do, food stalls and arguably the cheapest festival beer prices for many miles around. Early bird tickets cost £15 for adults & £8 for children with under-5s free. They're available at Blackwell Store and online via www.tickettailor.com/.../blackwellfestival/1266027

HELPING THE ALEX

AN INCREDIBLE amount of hard work by the The League of Friends team at The Alexandra hospital, Redditch, has generated invaluable donations in order to purchase of much needed equipment.

Money by the group raised has provided almost 200 blade-less fans for patient comfort (traditional fans can harbour germs). A £75,000 ultrasound scanner was recently donated which will allow the urology department to greatly reduce waiting times and offer quicker diagnosis.

Mr Vincent Koo, Consultant Urologist, thanked the group for their generous donation and said: "We can also use it to perform kidney stone surgery by targeting the kidney to accurately make a puncture hole to access the stone directly. We are now able to perform more procedures as we can offer prostate biopsies at the same time as kidney stone surgery within the department."

The League of Friends rely on volunteers and would warmly welcome new recruits.

Eco-heat is a Breeze

BREEZE Hot and Cold Installations Ltd, established in 2008, brings more than 20 years of experience in plumbing and heating. We are proud to be recognised with numerous accreditations, including MCS and TrustMark certifications.

While maintaining our customer base and offering a wide range of plumbing and heating solutions, Breeze Hot and Cold Installations Ltd has recently ventured into the renewable energy sector, with a key focus on Air Source Heat Pumps (ASHPs).

An ASHP transfers heat from the outside air to water, which can then heat rooms in your home through radiators or underfloor heating. It also heats water stored in a hot water cylinder for use in taps, showers, and baths. The process involves absorbing heat from the air into a fluid, which then passes through a heat exchanger into the heat pump. The pump raises the temperature and transfers the heat to water. ASHPs are suitable for many types of homes and are the most common type of domestic heat pump in the UK, with tens of thousands of installations.

To support the government's net-zero approach, the Boiler Upgrade Scheme (BUS) offers up to £7,500 towards the cost of a new heat pump, a 50% increase in support for air source models.

At Breeze Hot and Cold Installations, we can guide you through the ASHP installation process and handle the government grant application for you, making the transition to renewable energy even easier.

A family in the village of Alvechurch has been undergoing an extensive renovation of their home. Breeze Hot and Cold Installations is proud to contribute to transforming their house into an efficient, sustainable and beautiful home. The family has been exceptionally mindful of ensuring their changes are environmentally friendly while also future-proofing their home.

Highly efficient: An Air Source Heat Pump, installed in Alvechurch.

Their ASHP system is highly energy-efficient, producing more energy than it consumes. The family commented: "We are very happy with the result, still need to have a play with it during winter and set the temps etc. but so far it's working beautifully. Water pressure is brilliant, hot water temperature is perfect."

For this installation, the customer required both a cylinder and a buffer tank. There is often a misconception that cylinders and tanks are bulky and difficult to fit into the average home.

However, for our customer in Alvechurch, we were able to compactly and neatly fit both the cylinder and buffer tank under the staircase.

Another misconception for ASHPs is concerns for the noise volume. Since installation our customers have commented: "The noise of the pump is no louder than our fridge. It is not an issue at all. It's almost reassuring to hear it working. That is, when I notice it, which is not very often. It doesn't make noise all the time, as far as I can tell. Unless that is because I don't notice it because it's so quiet."

Alongside the installation the ASHP, Breeze Hot and Cold also installed Polypipe Underfloor Heating for our family in Alvechurch. Polypipe is an innovative and unique low-profile floor heating system. The underfloor heating systems works seamlessly with the ASHP making it a perfect heating solution.

A neat fit: The cylinder and the buffer tank fit under the stairs.

Further afield in Kington, Breeze Hot and Cold Installations recently completed a large-scale project by installing three ASHPs at a single property, providing a combined load of 30KW.

At Breeze, we offer a comprehensive design package to determine the best individualised setup for your property. Regardless of the size of your home or building, we can create plans to meet all your needs and requirements.

Breeze

If you're considering switching to renewable energy sources or have any heating and plumbing needs, Breeze Hot and Cold Installations are here to answer any questions you may have. Based in Alvechurch we are always happy to make time for members of our community.

THE COVER of our combined July and August issue from 2004 showed a group of children from Tardebigge First School enjoying a canal boat trip from Alvechurch Marina to school, dressed in period costumes as part of a class project.

IN THE NEWS: Barnt Green Scouts launched an appeal to raise money for a new headquarters, after their 72-year-old hut was destroyed by fire. Retired leader Michael Docherty described the loss as "devastating" but said the "scouting spirit" would survive.

Elsewhere, Cofton Hackett residents celebrated as their bid to buy Cofton Lake was accepted, meaning the area would be safe from potential development.

RETIRING HEADTEACHER Norma Kift (left) handed over the keys to Crown Meadow First School to her successor Janette Morris, watched by chair of governors Margaret Parry. Mrs Kift had been at the school since 1988, and in charge for more than nine years.

ENGLAND SHIRTS for dogs proved popular during the Euro 2004 football tournament, as sold in Barnt Green shop Paws Here and modelled for The Village by owner James Slater's dog Amy.

THE ALVECHURCH neighbourhood plan was progressing after a first round of consultation with villagers. One early change was the plan's "vision" had been judged too long and amended to: "Alvechurch parish – a community where managed change and celebration of its rural character go together."

NOT SO SPARKLING

Dear Editor – I totally agree with every item mentioned in M Witham's letter "Where's my sparkling service?" in last month's magazine (regarding the new route and timetable of the 182 and 183 Diamond bus service).

I have also used the old 182 bus for many years to Redditch and to Alvechurch library.

Now I can't go to the library as the bus no longer goes by it because of the route being changed.

Many potential passengers used to wait at the top of of Bittell Lane, Barnt Green, living either at this end of Sandhills Lane or Sandhills Road or, like myself, in Bittell Lane.

Now there is an eight to 10 minutes walk to a bus stop in the village. This was not researched properly, if at all!

Also there is no provision for wheelchair access to this bus. This bus should be for able-bodied and disabled passengers alike (the bus would need to be a larger bus for 22 passengers).

Why was it allowed for only 18 passengers so that the disabled could not use it?

It's not a service at all for a disabled passenger. It is certainly not a "Sparking Service".

Remembering village Safeway

Dear Editor – I recently found this picture of a Safeway while I was sorting through old pictures I found at home in Alvechurch.

I believe this may have been located where the Co-op is, in the shopping precinct Alvechurch.

I was wondering if anyone had any recollection of this Safeway, and has any idea of the date it was taken – and even of the people on the picture.

Curious,
Alvechurch

WHERE'S VINNY?

THREE–year–old Freddy Davies, from Alvechurch, shows off the Mini Vinny he won for finding the little creature in June's hunt the hedgehog competition in The Village magazine.

If you want to win one for yourself, you'll need to try to find the little hedgehog hiding somewhere in this magazine (the one shown above is just a guide).

Tell us where he's hiding via email – see details on the bottom of the page opposite – and please include your name, address and phone number, and we'll draw a winner at random.

The closing date is midnight on 1 August 2024. We'll let you know if you've won and you can collect your Mini Vinny from our office – and pose for a photo with your prize!

A TABLE TOP SALE at Alvechurch Baptist Church raised more than £720 towards the maintenance and management of the church. Villagers were invited to have a table to sell unwanted items for £10 per table, while acoustic band Spirit of Rosa played tunes throughout. There was also a plant sale, silent auction and a cake stall for visitors to peruse.

CARING FOR COMMUNITY

THE Lickey Community Group, (committee pictured above) formed to support and enhance the area, recently held their AGM.

It included an entertaining talk about the research and background of the recently unveiled information boards at Rednal, by Mike Brooke.

The Marlbrook Tip has occupied much of the group's time. Roy Hughes reported on a distinct lack of activity, although water escaping from the site was causing an issue to local homes.

BARNT GREEN golf rising star Jake Jeff-Johnston, aged 13, has qualified to play in the Faldo Futures Final.

The event, which will take place at The Belfry in August, will commence the day before The Betfred British Masters, which is also held at The Belfry.

Jake secured his place following a recent win – with a gross score of three under par – at a Sir Nick Faldo Futures Regional Qualifying Event at Sunningdale Heath in Ascot.

FUEL THE JOURNEY

Donate to Support Triathlon Raising Money for Charity

THREE athletic young men are set to undertake an epic triathlon challenge this summer, that will span nearly 300 gruelling miles across five countries, to raise money for the Bromsgrove Basement Project for young people, writes Sarah Rees.

The adventure kicks off with Declan Ball diving into the icy waters of the English Channel, swimming its 21 miles of challenging currents unassisted to reach France. His anticipated time to complete the crossing is 15 hours!

Since Matthew Webb's historic swim in 1875, when he became the first to conquer the English Channel, only about 2,000 individuals have completed the treacherous solo crossing.

Declan, a 24-year-old Bromsgrove barber shop owner is a seasoned competitive swimmer and semi-pro boxer who thrives on adrenalin. However, as he gears up for his role, he is aware of the challenges ahead. This isn't just about stamina—he'll have to dodge jellyfish and battle unpredictable currents while navigating one of the world's busiest shipping lanes!

Once on French soil, 23-year-old plumber George Creed from Sutton Coldfield will seize the baton from Declan and embark on a staggering 50-mile ultra-marathon, running tirelessly to the Belgium border.

George played rugby for Worcester Warriors as a teenager, and has taken part in charity MMA fights, turning amateur this year. As a running rookie, he's counting on his rugged sports background to help him master pacing and endure the pain in his knees and feet as the miles grind on.

The final stage of the triathlon will take 23-year-old Bromsgrove based construction firm owner Dylan De Sousa on a relentless 200-mile cycle from Belgium to Germany.

Dylan was also once a force to be reckoned with on the rugby pitch. He is a professional scuba diver and self-confessed "gym junkie", who has only recently channelled his sporting passion into cycling. Nailing his nutrition will be crucial, as he'll be burning around 12,000 calories during the 200-mile cycle.

The triathletes, clockwise from above: Dylan De Sousa, Declan Ball, George Creed.

Together, the trio will conquer this monumental journey of endurance to raise vital funds for The Basement Project in Bromsgrove and mental health support charity, My Black Dog - transforming their sweat and aching limbs into support for people who are facing homelessness or dealing with severe mental health challenges.

It was back in December 2023 when the lads hatched their plan to tackle a sporting challenge and raise some serious money for the two charities. Since then, they have been pushing their limits, training relentlessly to reach peak physical fitness.

On 29th July, staff and volunteers from The Basement Project will be joining the trio for a 5K training run around Sanders Park.

Kelly Turner, fundraiser for The Basement Project said: "We are delighted that Declan, George and Dylan will be fundraising for us as part of this epic challenge. Every penny donated to The Basement Project goes towards supporting young people."

There is a two-week window for the start date of the triathlon because Declan's channel crossing is controlled by a "swim window", which ensures the conditions are optimal for the greatest chance of success. Based on this, it is hoped the challenge will take place late August/early September.

PICNICKING AS IT POURS

VILLAGERS awoke on the morning of Alvechurch's Picnic in the Park to torrential rain.

Despite the downpour, the Picnic in the Park team continued to set up for the event, and by the time the Fun Dog Show started at 10am, the skies had cleared and things were looking a little brighter.

Hardy folk, unperturbed by "a bit of rain", donned wellies and raincoats, and arrived in droves at The Meadows, for a day of fun.

The planned bouncy castle and pony rides were unable to set up, but most stalls and performances braved the weather and went ahead as planned.

While it was brighter than feared, occasional downpours drove people to take cover under marquees and umbrellas – though this didn't dampen spirits and villagers carried on in good humour.

The event was officially opened at midday, just as a particular monsoon-like downpour began and xxxxxxxxxx cut the ceremonial ribbon.

Alvechurch Community Choir took to the stage, and sung through the rain.

By the time the dancers from Amy Greaves School of Dance were due to perform, the skies had once again brightened up, although the school had to quickly adapt some of their routines for the wet ground (however the senior dancers continued with their original routine anyway, including a roll, to the pleasure of the crowd).

A variety of groups performed musical pieces throughout the day, including ukelele bands, choirs and vocalist Karen Germano.

As the day drew to a close, those who were staying out, made their way to Alvechurch Cricket Club to continue the festivities into the evening.

A spokesperson for the event said:

BROMSGROVE BEERS

BROMSGROVE beer festival was once again hailed a success by event organisers, with this year's festival offering more than 130 ales and more than 50 ciders.

The event even managed to entice many away from the football on the television.

The 2024 beer festival used "The Rousler" as the logo, which means "to wake up", and there duly was not much chance of people drifting off at the festival, with plenty on offer to entertain the crowds.

Singer and guitarist Clare Portman, "Lost Notes" group, Alvechurch Morris Men, Got2Sing choir and the Blackwell Concert Band all performed throughout the day, providing plenty of music and fun for people to enjoy while having a drink, or something tasty from one of the food wagons.

Town Crier Kevin Ward opened the event, with the formalities of the Court Leet, who duly tested the ale – which was declared suitable for all to enjoy.

Almost 80 new CAMRA members were signed up during the festival and the organisers urged new volunteers to help out at future festivals.

Proceeds from this year's festival were donated to the Grace Kelly Childhood Cancer Trust who said they were: "delighted and thrilled to have been chosen" and gave their heartfelt thanks to CAMRA and the festival team.

Another win: The Weighbridge is awarded Pub of the Year by CAMRA again

BLACKWELL BONANZA

ORGANISERS OF Blackwell Village Festival were thrilled with the glorious June weather that greeted them on the morning of the much anticipated village event.

The festival, which is a well-supported, now annual event in Blackwell, had an abundance of fun and games for all ages throughout the day.

As with 2023, children were presented with cards on arrival, to be stamped at each games stall, including hook-a-duck, a soccer challenge and the "Nerf gun" gallery. Once completed with all of the stamps, the card could then be exchanged for a bag of sweets.

For those unable to take part in the children's challenges, there was casked ale on tap, a Prosecco bar and soft drinks.

Villagers turned up, with camping chairs, gazebos and picnic blankets, ready to pick their spot for the day and bask in the beautiful early summer weather.

For those who didn't bring a picnic with them to enjoy, a mobile pizza truck served delicious pizzas, and cakes were available from the church cake tent.

A bouncy castle provided entertainment for young, old, and everyone in between – Rev Sherry Gidney and Rev Louise Beasley gave it a good go.

The afternoon also saw the now traditional Tug O'War, bringing everyone together as younger and more experienced tuggers worked together in a heartfelt show of strength – though it was not entirely clear who the winning teams were (but that's not the point!).

The event concluded with live music from The Reflections, a four-piece band playing in their smart "The Prisoner" jackets. Much fun was had by all who attended.

Blackwell's next big event, their music festival will be held again in September. Tickets are available now.

Bouncing Vicars: Rev Sherry Gidney and Rev Louise Beasley enjoy the festival entertainment.

A well deserved sit-down: The festival team take a break from running the event.

GLASTON-BIGGER!

GROWING year on year, Glastonbeoley is a "must" for the diary. This year, Worcestershire's answer to Worthy Farm, was held at Redditch Cricket, Hockey and Rugby Club.

Twenty performances graced the big stage, with a further 21 in the club house over the weekend, catering to all musical tastes.

Although consistently a very popular event, even the organisers were pleasantly surprised by the popularity of the event. Event organiser Debbie Joynes said: "This year's GlastonBeoley took us all by surprise. It seemed as though we doubled in numbers overnight!

"The people were as varied and beautiful as the music. It was so lovely to see so many families having such a great time together."

Between 2018–2023, Glastonbeoley has raised over £35,000 for charity, which Debbie said was aided by "the brilliant musicians, who all perform for free, and are just amazing."

Debbie thanked the volunteers of this year's successful event: "The running of this real community event is only possible with our dedicated volunteers, and we are always looking for more."

Plans are already coming together for Glastonbeoley 2025, if you are interested in joining the crew, or visiting, you can keep up with the event at www.glastonbeoley.co.uk.

HELLO, SUMMER!

WE hope, anyway! Or was that one week we had at the end of June 'it' for our summer this year? If you're longing for some summer sun –and the tan to go with it – our skincare experts would like to remind you that the best product for amazing skin this summer (and the rest of your life) is suncream.

There are plenty of salons locally which can provide fake tans and spray tans, but not many which can give you new skin after yours has been sun damaged – so wear the suncream, yes we know, even if it's not really sunny.

Of course, there are lot of other ways to treat yourself this summer, if you want silky smooth legs (or anywhere really), as well as traditional shaving and waxing, you can explore IPL (Intense Pulsed Light technology), which targets the root of hair follicles to prevent new growth. Sounds great. . . surely it takes ages? Actually, some salons have technology which can zap these areas in as little as 30 mins per session. Short enough to pop in on your lunch break!

It's going to get busy in our village salons over summer, so – this is your reminder to book your appointments for your summer nails hair removal or tans (maybe book a few so you're sorted for all of summer). And, remember your suncream!

Enchanting evenings

THE MIDLANDS Sinfonia concluded their season with a final concert "Love & Romance" and many of the audience would be forgiven believing the best was kept for last.

The headline performer was the world-renown guitarist Craig Ogden (pictured below) who has been described by the BBC Music Magazine as "A worthy successor to Julian Bream". The Australian-born guitarist joined the orchestra for a number of pieces during the evening.

The programme included works by Vivaldi, Boccherini, Sibelius and two pieces by Elgar. The breadth of the concert included Crazy Little Thing Called Love penned by the late Freddie Mercury and Romance No.1 by Classic FM presenter John Brunning.

Chair of the society Marian Barwell said it was: "A fantastic last concert of the season. It was wonderful to have Craig return to perform with the orchestra. His first visit to Alvechurch was for a solo concert in March 2020, the last before we were obliged to cancel the remaining programme when the dreaded pandemic stopped play".

Belying their village location, this professional orchestra manages to attract a surprising number of high quality musicians in addition to its regulars players.

The new season details are now being finalised with trips out to venues further afield promised.

THE DECEPTIVE ALLURE OF 'MORE'

This month, Martin Pryor explains the tradeoff between how we spend and save our money and what our financial decisions mean for our futures.

CASHFLOW is the lifeblood of any financial plan. How we allocate the money coming in will determine both the present and the future of our families. It's not a glamorous topic, but it's undeniably ground zero of financial success.

Our cashflow challenges evolve as we move through the different life phases. Our early working years are typically about providing for essential daily "needs".

For those whose careers allow them to break free from daily concerns, the allure of certain "wants" starts to emerge. These desires challenge our beliefs about what we need to be happy.

This internal battle rages on throughout life, and how we respond to this challenge will determine our future financial success. But what truly brings fulfilment, and what consequences do these decisions have for our future selves?

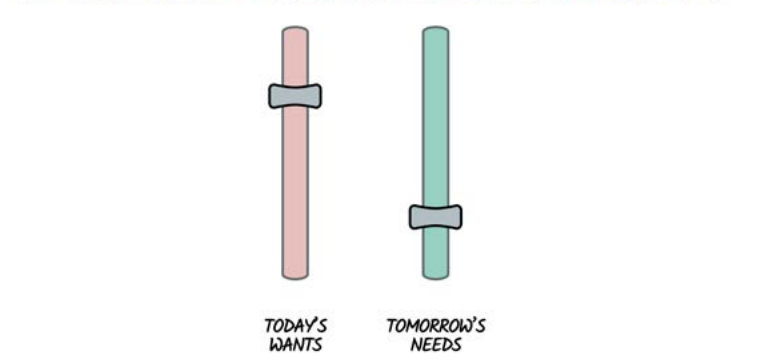
THE QUICKSAND OF ACCUMULATION

Our desire to accumulate more is grounded in evolution. A striving for "more" drove past generations to create the world we now live in, and current-day economic theory is still based on the assumption that "more is better".

But, in a world where most of us have moved well beyond providing for basic needs, does this instinct for more create problems we could do without?

As financial advisers, we have witnessed firsthand families who have become ensnared by lifestyle creep at the expense of their futures. It's a tradeoff many now regret, but like quicksand that gradually ensnares its victim, it's difficult to break free.

Similarly, we have worked with many wealthy families who have found a way to overcome the desire for "shiny new things".



These families have a well-developed and personal philosophy of their values and a clear picture of what they consider a life well-lived.

EMBRACING THE TRADEOFF

There are many ways that spending can bring happiness and joy – interestingly, many of our clients have shifted their spending from possessions to experiences with family and loved ones.

However, everything in financial planning is a tradeoff. For many, embracing "more" comes at the expense of their own "tomorrow".

Tragically, this only becomes evident in most cases when it's too late to change course. Before all of us lies the invitation to let go of pursuing "more", choosing instead to embrace "enough".

We appreciate and understand that everyone's definition of satisfaction and "enough" is unique and personal.

No matter what your definition of "enough" is, for most of us, this still means lives magnitudes better than our grandparents.

NAVIGATING TOGETHER

We encourage you to seek clarity about what is truly important to you, bringing more intention to your spending and investing.

All consumption cannot, and should not, be avoided. Indeed, one person's "want" is another person's "need".

While you will always remain the expert in the design of your own life, we are the experts in guiding families in making the tradeoffs that provide them both meaning and an independent future.

Guiding families from pursuing "more" to embracing "enough for tomorrow" is our reason for being.

The comprehensive planning we provide includes all the tools you need to walk your financial journey successfully.

We look forward to guiding you on your journey to "enough".

To fix or not to fix..?

That is the question! Mark Meads explains the options you have when it comes to fixing your mortgage rate and how Village Financial can help guide you to make the right choice.

RECENTLY I've been having a lot of conversations with clients about whether or not to fix their mortgage rate.

The Bank of England maintained their interest rate at 5.25% in June, despite inflation falling back to their target of 2%. Many commentators at the beginning of the year had predicted that we would have had lower rates by now.

Whilst there is still an expectation that interest rates will come down a little this year, realistically it is unlikely to get back to the rates we have seen in recent times.

This leaves my clients with difficult decisions and while everyone's individual circumstances are different, there seem to be two clear routes.

Either fix now for five years plus, knowing that you can afford the payments for this period whatever happens to interest rates.

Or alternatively fix for a shorter period of two or three years, in the hope that rates may come down by the end of that period.

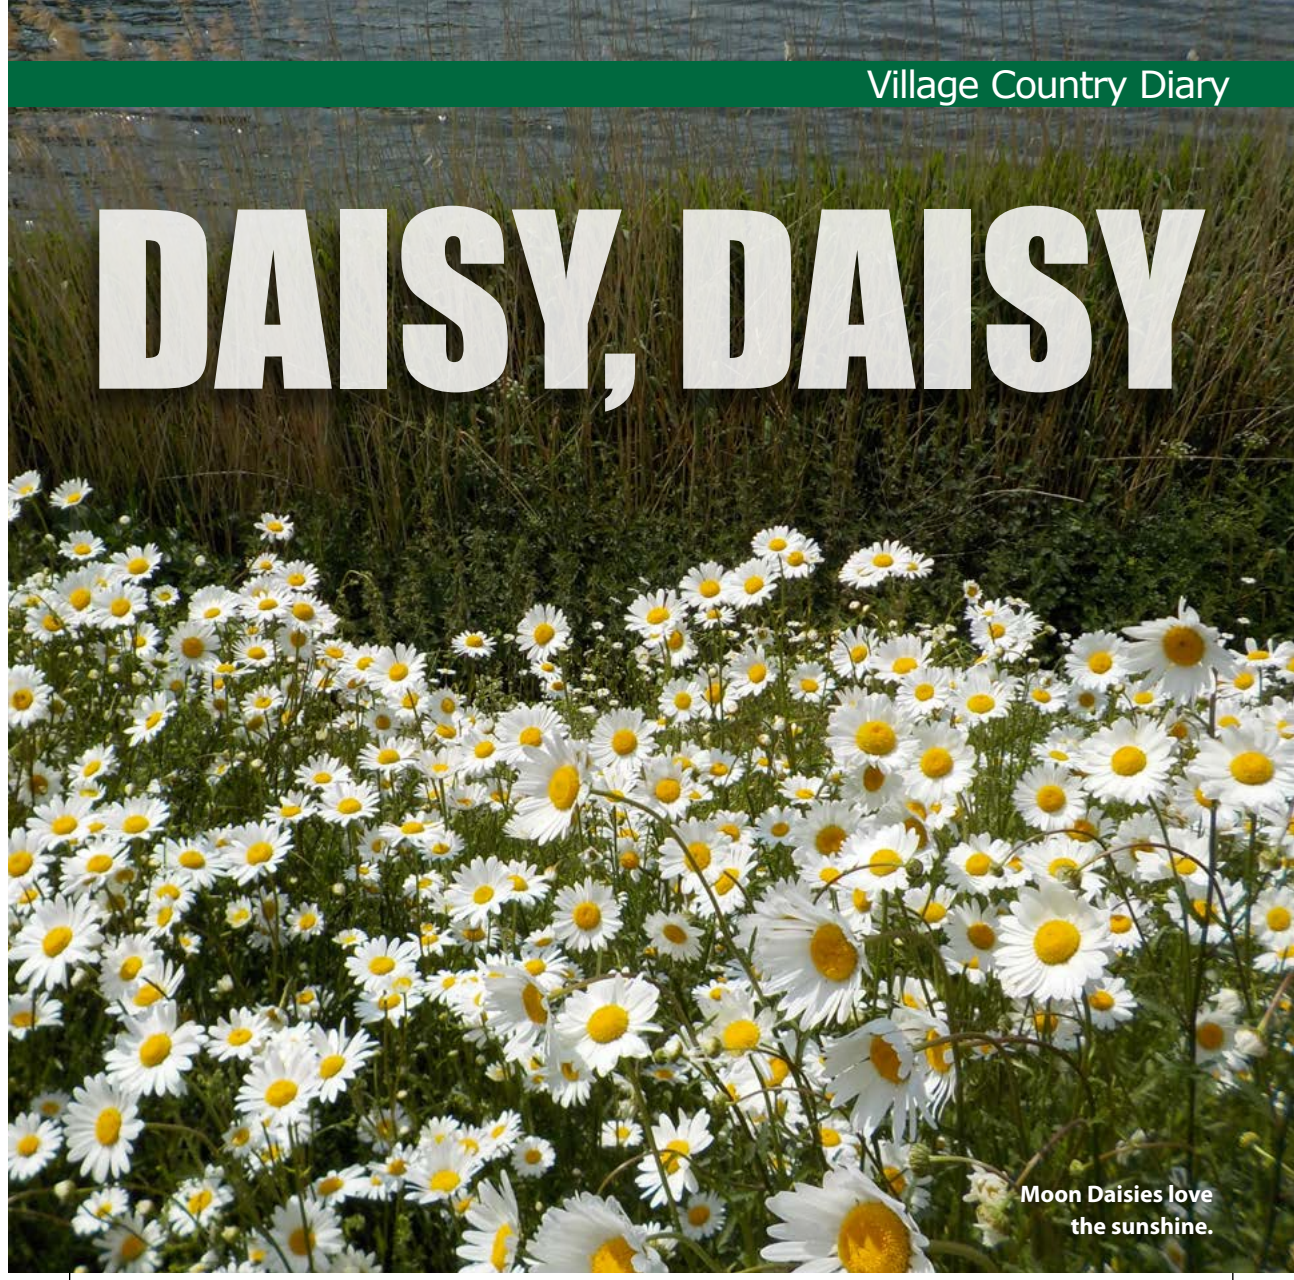
DAISY, DAISY



Moon Daisies love the sunshine.

IT'S been another month where we've heard dire warnings of the depletion of our nature, losing plants, insects, birds and other animals more and more.

Some of you may have been at the inspiring talk about bumblebees at the Alvechurch Village Society in May.

The speaker made it very clear that the solution for the success of this species and many others was a continuous supply of flowering plants.

I hope no one started cutting down the flowering plants in their gardens on 1 June, thinking no-mow-May was good enough.

All flowering plants except grasses and some trees carry the nectar and pollen that insects need, and we should aim for a continuous run of flower from March to August at least.

This month Mary Green talks us through the plants we see every day that are far more important than we may realise . . .

Cutting them down in early June is probably worse than not letting them grow, as insects will have been

continues from previous page

encouraged to make their homes there, only to find their food supply gone. Sadly this has happened in St Laurence churchyard, which is not usually mowed quite so suddenly and comprehensively.

However, as I write this, in June, there are some lovely "lawns" full of flowers on my walk from Withybed into Alvechurch. I hope they keep it up!

This continuous flowering happens in our biggest flower family Compositae, now renamed Asteraceae. Its more common name is the Daisy family.

There are more than 100 species, some difficult for a non-specialist to tell apart. Others are so common that we don't really value them. You can find them in flower pretty well all year round, and they are a vital source of nectar and pollen for insects as well as providing food for birds.

The "flowers" are actually clusters of tiny flowers or florets, each with pollen and nectar. There are two kinds, ray and disc florets. Daisies have both: the yellow disc florets in the middle and the white ray florets outside.

Daisies are associated with childhood, perhaps because they are so common and grow readily in human-planted lawns. Most of us can remember making daisy chains.

The name means "day's eye" because it opens in broad daylight and closes at night or in bad weather. The Latin name is Bellis perennis, meaning beautiful all year.

In mild years it will flower in winter and continue through till summer. It is very resilient and will try to grow again if mowed down. The leaves and flowers, like many Compositae, are edible.

A common member of this family is the dandelion – with ray florets only.

For some reason we love daisies but not dandelions. Yet they are a crucial plant for maintaining our biodiversity. They are the main nectar and pollen source for insects in early spring and have been described as one of the three most important nectar providers in our flowers (along with clover and heather).

Lucky for insects: Insects love a daisy, which flowers continuously.

Dandelion: Seeds ready to blow away.

If you visit an ancient biodiverse hay meadow like Eades Meadow in May or June it is full of different species of flowers, but if you go in March, you'll see a field of dandelions.

Yet adverts for plant killers (which help destroy our environment) especially target dandelions. Perhaps this is because they are so strong and deep-rooted. This helps them secure carbon in the soil. Like daisies they will try to flower again if mown down. However, if you leave them alone they will only flower once in the spring.

Dandelions are eaten by animals, insects – and humans. The leaves appear in recipes in fancy restaurants, and the flowers and young leaves are used in salads.

They have much more food value than lettuce. The roots have had various uses including "dandelion coffee" and we all know the old-fashioned drink dandelion and burdock (burdock being another member of this plant family).

Burdock: Part of the old-fashioned drink.

They have ancient herbal usage, being diuretic. The French name is "pissenlit" meaning wet-the-bed, and many of local names are similar. You may have been told as a child not to pick them as they made you wet the bed (you'd have to eat a lot for this!).

If everyone who reads this didn't cut off dandelions and daisies before they've flowered and died down, we could rescue some of our insect population, and out birds, and ourselves.

Compositae flower late in the year as well as early. A prominent one in July is knapweed, a handsome purple flower with two species, the "greater" with long ray florets.

It grows in old meadows and pasture and unmown hedgerows. It attracts insects and birds and the heads persist late into the winter. It is rather like a prettier, non-prickly thistle. But don't overlook the thistle either. It's one of those resilient plants which is a huge source of pollen and nectar and food for birds.

There are 14 species of thistle, from the standard spear thistle to the marsh thistle which spreads readily from its roots to the beautiful woolly thistle and towering Scottish thistle.

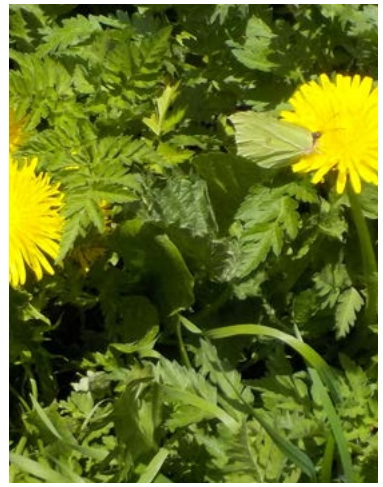
Then there are two yellow ones called sowthistle, one prickly and one not.

Like many Compositae, they have seeds with silky attachments allowing them to float in the wind and spread.

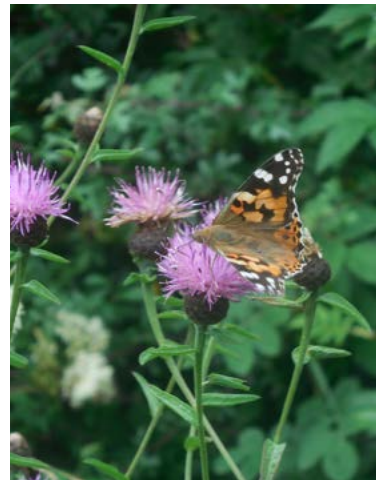
These seeds are loved by birds and you will sometimes see big flocks on thistles, especially goldfinches.

The prickles mean the plants aren't easily eaten by mammals. But many insect larvae can eat the young leaves, making them extra valuable. I have a five-foot prickly sowthistle in my garden!

Perhaps the most contentious plant in this family is ragwort, a large plant with raggedy toothed leaves and yellow flowers with disc and ray florets.



Camouflaged: Brimstone butterfly on a dandelion.



Painted lady butterfly: On knapweed.

Taking a rest: Butterfly on a thistle.

Bumblebee: Hawkbit in a mixed meadow.

Like many of our wild plants it carries protective chemicals which can be poisonous or can be used as medicine.

It is poisonous to cattle and especially horses, which is why it is so disliked, and one of the plants the law tells you not to allow to grow near livestock.

Yet cattle and horses will not usually eat it – they know. Unfortunately they may eat it if it is cut and dried out when they may not recognise it, which means you don't want it in hayfields.

Horses in badly overgrazed pasture where there is insufficient food may eat ragwort out of desperation.

Oddly enough sheep can eat it happily.

Ragwort is the food plant for one of our most attractive moths, the cinnabar moth. This has tiger-stripy yellow and black caterpillars and beautiful red and black adults. They used to be common and helped to keep ragwort under control. Because ragwort has been removed so much, they have become rare. So when ragwort comes back, they aren't there to control it.

You can't take out one of our native plants without altering the balance of nature and destroying something else.

Ragwort especially grows where humans have already disturbed the balance and especially when they have then let nature take over. It's an early coloniser but is gradually reduced as other plants and trees become more established.

continues overleaf

The drug in ragwort is being investigated as a possible cancer treatment. It's also of course a great nectar and pollen source for all insects.

If we didn't have this fear of it we'd find it beautiful. I saw big bunches of it being sold on a street stall in London as cut flowers – they called it Summer Gold. On the Isle of Man where it is called cushag it is a national flower.

A flower everyone seems fascinated by is pineapple weed. This small plant has only disc florets and looks like a little pineapple. It smells like pineapple when crushed and sure enough tastes like it too. It has an interesting habit – it grows in gateways. It is an annual and so depends on there being a bit of wet bare earth to start its seeds growing every year.

Something you will see around you a lot in the summer and autumn is a tall yellow flower a bit like a dandelion.

There are a lot of different species all of which look very similar, and are variously called hawkbit, hawkweed or cat's ear. They come up frequently in lawns. They aren't dandelions but are also a vital pollen and nectar source.

One that is easily spotted is autumn hawkbit, a tall showy yellow flower that comes in late summer and lasts through September. It is always covered with insects. If it's orange, it's fox-and-cubs!

Many Compositae have medicinal herbal properties. One of my favourites is tansy, which used to be common round here but won't survive cutting.

It has lots of little yellow buttons (disc florets only) and very scented leaves. It was called the poor man's myrrh as it was used as a preservative of anything dead (it also makes lovely cakes, which keep for ages!). Insects love it and it even has a shiny little beetle of its own.

One of the most attractive is another daisy, the moon daisy or ox-eye daisy. Everyone knows this and it is often grown in gardens, though a true wild flower. It can cover open areas in summer, loving old hay meadows, pastures, verges and anywhere there is sunshine. Chamomile is similar but smaller with feathery leaves and many-flowered stems.

Later in summer comes another very common Compositae called nipplewort. This has tiny green buds like nipples followed by small starry yellow flowers and then a beautiful seed structure (I used some in my Christmas decorations last year). I think its name is a good way to remember that "wort" (the old word for a herbal plant) is pronounced as "wert" not (as many think) as "wart".

After all, no-one wants nipple warts!

■ Here's a poem (right) I wrote recently when the Withybed Poets had "Heroes" as their theme.

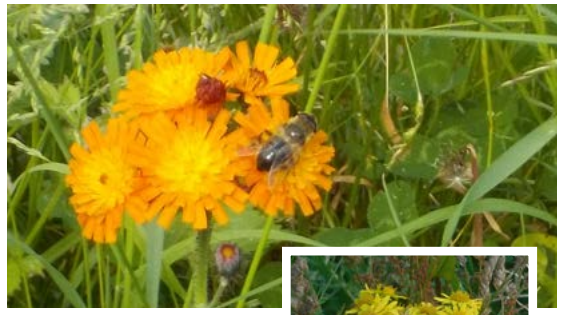
Editor's Note: Apologies for two errors last month. A typo crept into the heading for this article which should have read "Creatures of breath" (not breadth). And that bee on the flower was actually a fly – a common error made there. Many flies and hoverflies mimic wasps and bees, helping to keep themselves safe from predators.



Clockwise from above: A bee sits on Fox-and-cubs, Ragwort feeds many insects, Chamomile, with feathery leaves.

No Heroes

No heroes -
Except perhaps the ones who watch the dying
Pick children up and kiss away their bruises
Clean up the mess of other people, smiling.
No heroes -
But maybe those who work in underground dark
Or icy winds to bring me light and warmth
And those who take up a fiddle and play
Or sing so sweetly that it breaks down fences.
No heroes -
Save farmers who know the ways of worms
And loop the fields in hedges full of may
The neighbours who are quietly beside you
Just when you didn't know you needed them.
Not statues, whose feet are truly clay
Not chests of medals made of metals
My heroes -
People whose feet are flesh and touch the earth.

The anonymous birder How to enjoy village birdlife

SOME FOOD FOR THOUGHT

I'VE returned to using my bird feeder again. I was wary of harmful viruses which have affected certain finches in recent years. But the advice seems to be that as long as you clean the feeders on a fairly regular basis, the positive effects outweigh the negative effects of creating an environment where a large number of birds will artificially visit the same spot to feed.

This does create a "pecking order" where a clear hierarchy emerges.

Generally, a good big 'un beats a good little 'un.

The greater spotted woodpecker will dominate on its occasional visits, followed by the nuthatch. Then the finches fight it out with themselves, robins and dunnocks. Followed by the tit family the smallest of which, the coal tit with a white stripe on the back of it's head – flits in and out at top speed before it gets mugged by a larger rival.

There's a lot of that in the bird world, rather like when somebody nicks one of your chips without permission.

Gulls are always doing it and not just with chips. Observe them at the local lake or if you take a beach holiday; seemingly spending more energy on stealing things off other birds than being good, honest birds searching for food themselves. "Kleptoparasitism" is what it's called, the next time you unknowingly share your food.

The world of feeding birds doesn't seem as simple as it once was. Where do the experts stand on feeding the ducks these days?

You will probably have seen notices being blissfully ignored in your local parks on not feeding bread to the birds.

The RSPB advice seems to suggest that feeding birds bread "in moderation" is not harmful, however if lots of people feed them bread in moderation then the birds just get lazy and eat that instead of what they would naturally eat, such as vegetation and seeds.

A good rule of thumb would be: if you are going to feed birds try to make it something that they might find in the wild.

I've not seen a duck leaving Tesco Express with a loaf of white sliced bread in it's bill. Even if it did, an urban gull would probably practise kleptoparasitism on it and make a chip butty with the rest of its illicit bounty.

Back in the garden I find sunflower hearts work well with a range of birds and they don't have to use up energy removing the husk of the seed. Particularly useful in the winter when feeding takes up most of a bird's day.

The smaller the bird the greater surface area to lose heat from and the bigger energy gap to make up.

Not all birds eat nuts or seeds however. The goldcrest, for example, not always seen but a very common garden bird, is insectivorous, eating only small insects and spiders it finds with it's pin-like bill even in the winter months.

Many birds avert hunger by changing diet depending on the season or just by being very adaptable.

The crow family will eat pretty much anything – including other birds – and will even pick through droppings. Their strong digestive acid, as with other scavenging birds, allows them to digest a wide range of food without harm to themselves.

Robins like many species have a mixed diet, prefering invertebrates but will happily visit the birdfeeder and take to berry eating in the autumn.

You may have noticed that most birds feed their young insects, particularly caterpillars even though they may be seed or nut eaters. This provides easily digestible protein and fluid for development. Greenfinches are an exception to this rule, feeding the young primarily seeds which have been ground up in their gizzard and then lovingly regurgitated for their offspring.

A garden visitor: A goldfinch stops for seeds.

Picture by Dennis Brown

Many seed-eating birds also swallow grit to help this grinding process.

Like many of our resident species, most of our migratory visitors such as swifts, martins, swallows and the visiting warblers rely almost completely on a diet of insects for themselves and their offspring.

There has been an alarming decline in the invertebrate population over the past 25 years so maybe the best thing we can do if we would like to give our bird population a helping hand is to provide an insect-friendly environment.

This may be finding a way to incorporate more native species, yes the "W" word, in our gardens and community spaces. Watch out for Gulls when you get your chips though.

20 YEARS' VISITING VILLAGE GARDENS

THE VILLAGE has been reporting on open gardens for twenty years now. Villagers have opened their gardens through community events and national schemes, offering visitors a chance to explore and gather inspiration for their own green spaces.

Hundreds of gardens have been opened since The Village first reported on them in 2004, mainly through the National Gardens Scheme. From small and colourful cottage gardens to environmentally friendly wildlife havens, expansive gardens with specialised areas to peaceful waterside spaces. As you'll see on these pages showing just a few of the gardens over the last two decades.

Exploring local gardens are a wonderful way to spend the day for the avid gardener, those who just like spending time outdoors or even just those who are interested (read: nosy) in what their neighbours' gardens look like.

As The Village is delivered, Rowney Green will be opening gardens to visitors over 13–14 July. There are further open gardens through the National Garden Scheme in the area , visit www.findagarden.ngs.org.uk

Summer satellite show

Amateur astronomer Brian Watkiss peers into the Village night sky.

SO, it's holiday time again when the days are warmer and the evenings can be spent just sitting and watching the skies.

The major planets are all still lurking around the other side of the Sun but can quite easily be seen. You just have to be up at about 4am when you'll find Saturn high in the south and Jupiter and Mars are fairly close together over in the east.

They get really close on the 14th of August and the Moon passes right in front of Saturn at 4.20am on the 21st, so that could be worth getting out of bed for.

Sunset is around 9pm and that is the perfect time to be looking out for satellites. Get comfy, perhaps with a little something to keep out the cold and just stare at the darkest bit of sky you can find.

You'll soon spot a "star" wandering across the sky, at about the same speed that an aircraft flies over but with no flashing lights or sound. As your eyes adjust, you'll see more and more and if you're with other people, it can start to become quite competitive.

If you are really keen, heavens-above.com will identify which satellite you are seeing, usually just a spent rocket, easily seen because they are fairly large and painted white.

By far the brightest object in low Earth orbit is the International Space Station. So big that you would struggle to fit it on a football pitch and weighing more than 400 tons, it zooms around the world at 17,000 miles per hour at a height of 200 miles.

"Heavens Above" is perfect for finding the ISS, showing its track across the sky and a map showing its track over the ground. It's amazing to discover that it can be seen even when it is over northern Spain.

As the skies get properly dark, you might begin to see "shooting stars" or meteors. These are mere specks of dust or tiny particles either left over from the formation of the Solar System or part of the trail of debris left behind by a comet as it approaches the Sun.

The reason these minute bits of space rubbish can produce such a bright display is because of their enormous speed.

Earth is travelling through space at many hundreds of thousands of miles per hour so anything travelling in the opposite direction collides with our atmosphere with huge force, compressing the air molecules in front of it.

As you may know if you have ever pumped up a bicycle tyre, when you compress air it gets warm. These particles get so hot they burn up and produce the bright streaks we see. Occasionally a large lump gets through to the ground as a meteorite but these are relatively rare.

July and August are particularly good for meteor spotting as there are three meteor showers but the peak is around the 12th August. This is the middle of the Perseid shower so the trails will appear to come from Perseus over in the northern sky but of course, they can be seen all over the sky.

So get those deck chairs out and start looking.

WHAT'S ON GUIDE

EXHIBITION:
JACK VETTRIANO IN ALVECHURCH?

... WELL, NOT QUITE! But there will be some pictures representing Vettriano's style on display at an exhibition of works by Pam's Art Group, who ususally meet in Alvechurch Village Hall on Thursdays writes Dave Morgan.

The exhibitions runs from Thursday July 25th to Saturday 27th. The competition theme also includes Philosophical style paintings so there will be an eclectic display at the exhibition.

Sponsored by Kamal Khan, of Spring View Care Limited, many of the winning pictures now deck the walls of his nursing homes in Alvechurch and Bromsgrove. His competitions have inspired many of the artists who attend the classes, led by Pam McGregor, to try something new, with some very positive results.

In addition to the competition entries there will also be about 100 other pictures on display, many produced during the last year and include paintings based on specific subjects set by Pam, like "Shade and Shadows" using acrylics and "Facades". Pam also challenged the artists to think outside of the box, including creating collages on the theme "Old and New" and "Recycled" using paper pulp to create 3D art.

Art teacher Pam commented: "We always appreciate the support we get from our sponsors who challenge the members to use their art skills to produce a painting in a style they may not have tried before. The diversity of styles means there will be something for everyone who visits the exhibition."

The exhibition will be open in the Alvechurch Village Hall from 10am, closing at 6pm on Thursday and Friday and 5pm on Saturday. There will be refreshments available each day and extra craft stands on Saturday.

Entry to the exhibition is free, and many of the pictures on display will be available at very reasonable prices, so there is always a chance of picking up a unique piece of original art by the next Jack Vettriano!

BRIDGE CLUBS JOIN FOR A BIG DEAL

THE CARD GAME of bridge has a strong social element (as well as being a competitive game). Nowhere is this stronger than in the "café bridge" format of the game, in which players move between cafes or pubs, playing a few hands in each. Following interruption due to Covid-19, Cafe Bridge resumed to this area last year, raising over £1,250 for charity.

This year, a festival of bridge will be running across the whole country in September and the Barnt Green event will form a part of that festival.

For the first time, Bromsgrove Bridge Club, the organisers of the Barnt Green Cafe Bridge event, will be joining forces with the two Barnt Green bridge clubs: the Barnt Green Bridge Club and the Monday Bridge Club, in order to make the event is even more successful than last year.

The festival of bridge, called "Bridge, It's a Big Deal", is raising money for Cancer Research UK.

In addition to raising money, the clubs will be providing information about where to play bridge, and learn to play, locally and a one-day "Introduction to Bridge" course will be run in November for those wishing to give the game a try.

Richard Jephcott, who lives in Barnt Green, said: "The event in Barnt Green has been popular for many years now and it is particularly pleasing that it brings the community together in so many ways. Local businesses support the raffle with some great prizes and, as well as local players, we have visitors from other parts of the country coming along and enjoying themselves. Cancer Research is so important and it is very pleasing for the bridge community to be able to support it."

Information about Bridge, It's a Big Deal, can be found at: www.ebu.co.uk/festival and details of the Barnt Green event, to be held on Thursday 12th September, will be available soon.

More information can be obtained by emailing Richard at: richardjephcott@outsideinsight.co.uk

A SINGING SUCCESS

BARNT GREEN Choral Society has now completed an outstanding 2023/2024 season. Under the skilful baton of Bromsgrove's own musical maestro, Steve Cowperthwaite, the choir now comprises 55 singers and has reached impressive new levels of excellence and musicality.

The society joined other Midland choirs to form a massed chorus in the autumn, and sang a charity concert in Birmingham to raise money for the musical education of under-privileged children.

The autumn concluded with the society's own Christmas Family Concert. A happy occasion with a full attendance singing a wide range of carols and festive favourites.

The spring term saw the society's major concert performance of Mozart's Requiem together with two Bach cantatas, and were accompanied by a 30-piece orchestra. The four soloists, including David Coulson as Bass, sang impressively.

This summer, the choir will deliver the opening concert at the Bromsgrove Music Festival, singing pieces from musicals by Andrew Lloyd Webber and others.

The choir is always interested in seeking new members, and if you are interested you can email them at info@barntgreenchoralsociety.org. You don't need to have experience of choral singing or be able to read music.

They meet on Monday evenings (7.45pm -9.45pm) September to June at the Parish Centre, Barnt Green, B45 8NR. You can go along for a few sessions to get the feel of things before deciding if you want to join.

Our September issue is an
